Prior crashes in area where scientist killed

Bicycle crash. There have been multiple bicycle crashes in the area where a visiting scientist was killed while riding her bike.

The fatal crash that killed a visiting MIT researcher riding her bicycle happened in an area recognized by the city as having multiple bike crashes in the past few years.

Dr. Kanako Miura, 36, was killed when she was involved in a collision with a truck near the intersection of Beacon Street and Charlesgate West not far from Kenmore Square Saturday afternoon. That stretch of road is considered by Boston EMS to have a medium to high frequency of cyclist incidents, according to the city's recently released Cyclist Safety Report.

Boston police were still investigating yesterday exactly how the crash occurred and left Miura dead. The driver of the truck that hit Miura was cooperating, police said.

"The driver of the truck is talking to detectives and cooperating with the investigation," police said. Police did not immediately release information on whether the crash was a hit-and-run or how the driver was located.

MIT identified Miura in a statement and said she had been at the Cambridge school since last fall and worked with a professor within the Computer Science and Artificial Intelligence Laboratory.

"Our hearts go out to her friends and colleagues at MIT, and especially the Miura family, who must absorb this terrible loss from so far away," MIT President L. Rafael Reif said.

The city released its report on cyclist safety last week at the same time Mayor Thomas Menino set a goal of reducing the number of injuries to bicyclists by 50 percent by 2020.

Marathon suspect. Task force formed at UMass

UMass Dartmouth yesterday announced it formed a task force to examine how it handled the aftermath of the Boston Marathon attack.

Suspect Dzhokhar Tsarnaev, 19, was enrolled as a student and living at UMass Dartmouth at the time of the April 15 bombings.

The campus was put on temporary lockdown after officials learned Tsarnaev was enrolled there.

The panel will look at emergency planning, "students in good standing" statuses and international students recruitment.

Street fight

Police find 400 in street, eight arrested

Eight people were arrested after Cambridge police were forced to quell multiple fights that broke out among a crowd of hundreds that had descended on Massachusetts Avenue early Friday morning.

Police responded to the area of 450 Massachusetts Ave. just after 2 a.m. Friday for a report of a large fight. When officers arrived they found about 400 people standing on the street and on the sidewalks on both sides of the roadway, many of them arguing and yelling back and forth. They had come from one of the nearby bars in Central Square, police said. METRO

Bad rider

Officials seek alleged T toucher

Transit Police are looking for help identifying a man who they say inappropriately touched a woman on a Green Line C trolley at Park Street Station last Tuesday. Surveillance photographs released yesterday show a man smiling while wearing a red shirt and hooded sweatshirt. He is estimated to be between 25 and 30 years old.

The MBTA has struggled with the issue of sexual misconduct, particularly on the Green Line due to its cramped quarters. METRO

College funding

Students seek to avert fee hikes

UMass student trustees are pushing for the Senate to join the House and Gov. Deval Patrick in funding the public university at a high enough level to stave off tuition and fee increases.

Patrick made new education spending a centerpiece of his $1.9 billion tax plan, putting in place $478.7 million for UMass in fiscal year 2014. That's enough new state funding to enable the state and students to evenly split the costs of attending UMass, and for university officials to freeze tuition and fees. SHNS

Train turmoil. Travelers dealing with residual effects of Conn. crash

About 30,000 travelers moving through Connecticut dealt with grueling commutes yesterday as trains between Boston and New York remained canceled due to a train crash Friday that injured more than 70 passengers and crew members.

A Metro-North train derailed and then was hit by another train between Fairfield and Bridgeport, Conn.

Many buses bound for New York from Boston's South Station were already sold out early yesterday morning.

While the snafu had little impact on Boston-area traffic, Total Traffic Network reporter Nichole Davis warned of holdups heading south.

"Anyone heading toward Connecticut is going to find snarled traffic there," she said.

Dozens dead in huge Oklahoma tornado

Deadly weather. Suburbs near Oklahoma City were hit hardest by the storm, which flattened an elementary school.

A deadly tornado with winds of up to 200 miles per hour devastated the Oklahoma City suburb of Moore yesterday, ripping up at least two elementary schools and a hospital and leaving a wake of tangled wreckage.

At least 51 people have been confirmed dead from the huge tornado, a medical official said, and the number is expected to rise.

The powerful tornado, rated the second-highest strength level of EF4, touched down at midafternoon and devastated a wide area of the town.

Television video showed tracts of homes destroyed, cars tossed about and piled atop one another, and at least one building on fire.

Rescue workers pulled third-graders from the devastated Plaza Towers Elementary school in Moore. At least seven children from the school were counted among the dead. Aerial video showed first responders sifting through the rubble yesterday night.

"I have never seen anything like this in my 18 years covering tornadoes here in Oklahoma City. This is without question the most horrific," said Lance West, a reporter for KFOR. REUTERS

The end. The Doors keyboardist, co-founder Manzarek dead at 74

Doors founding member Ray Manzarek is dead at the age of 74. The keyboard player, who contributed greatly to the band's signature sound on songs like "Light My Fire" and "Riders on the Storm" lost a battle to bile duct cancer in a clinic in Germany yesterday.

Ever since Doors singer Jim Morrison died in 1971 at the age of 27, Manzarek was crucial to preserving the band's legacy. He oversaw posthumous Doors releases and was even vocal about his dislike for the way his friend was portrayed in the 1991 movie, "The Doors." PAT HEALY

Poverty line

Study: More poor people in suburbs than cities

The number of people living in poverty in U.S. suburbs surpassed the number of poor in cities over the past decade, driven by strong growth in overall suburban populations, according to an analysis. The change is posing a challenge to some traditional U.S. approaches to fighting poverty, the Brookings Institution study found. The study cited several reasons for the change, including the shift to the suburbs of poor people seeking affordable housing or pushed out by gentrification. REUTERS

Yahoo promises not to screw up Tumblr buyout

Hello, kids. The $1.1 billion purchase gets the company a social media platform.

One of these companies seems more excited. / GETTY IMAGES

Yahoo Inc. will buy blogging service Tumblr for $1.1 billion in cash, giving the Internet pioneer a much-needed social media platform to reach a younger generation of users and breathe new life into its ailing brand.

The deal, announced yesterday, is a bold bet by Yahoo CEO Marissa Mayer to revitalize the company by co-opting a Web property with strong visitor traffic, but little revenue.

The combination of Yahoo and Tumblr creates an online powerhouse with roughly 1 billion users, which will draw in more advertisers and help Yahoo keep visitors on its properties for longer periods of time, Mayer told Reuters in an interview.

Yahoo made clear it was sensitive to concerns that it might damage Tumblr by making it less irreverent or more corporate. REUTERS

Bought in blood

Gandhi blood sample up for auction in London

Two microscope slides bearing the blood of former Indian leader Mahatma Gandhi are to go on sale in London today and are expected to fetch from $15,200 to $22,800.

The slides were obtained in 1924 when the father of the Indian independence movement was recovering from an appendectomy near Mumbai.

He was thought to have donated the blood to the family he was staying with at the time.

"To Gandhi devotees, it has the same status as a sacred relic to a Christian," said Richard Westwood-Brookes, a historical documents expert at Mullock's auctioneers, which is selling the item.

"It is an artifact [that] is revered by disciples of Gandhi, particularly in India, and therefore that is the sort of person who would go for it," he said. REUTERS

We check in with some of Hollywood's biggest names to see what they've been up to — in their own words, in 140 characters or fewer.

Today, Justin Bieber is feeling a whole lot of love, Channing Tatum likes a good bit of wisdom, Lena Dunham is choosing her words carefully and John Cleese smells a conspiracy.

@justinbieber: "I love music, my fans, my family, my friends ... And I love The Lord."

@channingtatum: "Go where you are celebrated — not tolerated. If they can't see the real value of you, it's time for a new start. —Unknown"

@lenadunham: "Under the right circumstances, I'd love to murder someone — something I'm glad I've never said in an interview."

@JohnCleese: "Why haven't they told who was elected vice pope? Is it a cover up?"

KStew splits yet again

The on-and-off relationship between Robert Pattinson and Kristen Stewart is currently off. "All this stuff came up," a source close to Pattinson, 27, tells Us Weekly about the reason for Split #234. The source told the magazine that Pattinson blew off a birthday party planned in his honor by Stewart. The two have been fighting "about the cheating, about how selfish she always is, about how moody she always is," the source explains.

Moody? Kristen Stewart? You don't say.

Three years later, Demi Lovato still thinks about Joe Jonas

It's been three years since her brief romance with Joe Jonas, but Demi Lovato is still talking about it. "We were in a relationship and we broke up, and at one point I was really mad at him," Lovato tells ABC's Nightline. "When you go through heartbreaks and things like that, you always have in mind somebody. It's like when you hear a song on the radio that reminds you of somebody, you're going to be reminded."

Ugh. Sometimes (and only sometimes) I feel for celebrities. Imagine having to constantly talk about an ex to major news outlets years after your fling. I cringe just thinking about it.

Miley Cyrus and Justin Bieber: The remix?

It looks like Miley Cyrus and Justin Bieber are working on a song together.

"I know pictures are flying around," Cyrus told E! at the Billboard Music Awards. "You guys will have to wait and see. I'm the biggest at top secrets. I've had this single ["We Can't Stop," to be released June 3] ready for about a year, and I've had to keep my lips sealed and just not say anything. So you'll see."

Cyrus says this one is for her fans. "I feel like this song really is for them and how I feel — that I can't stop and I'm going to be who I am, and they should be who they are and that they can't stop, and [no one] can stop us."

The singer has been spotted leaving Bieber's recording studio in the past. So as long as they are working on a single together — and not a baby — I'm totally fine with it.

Nicole Kidman and Keith Urban: Glamour and love on the red carpet

Nicole Kidman and husband Keith Urban were all over the red carpet (and each other) at the premiere of "Inside Llewyn Davis" during the 66th annual Cannes Film Festival on Sunday. The lovebirds kissed, hugged and held hands for photographers. Basically, they were seriously cute. And annoying. But generally more cute than anything else.

Kat Von D says: 'Go Big or Go Home'

Interview. The artist doesn't compete with men: "I get cramps once a month, but that's it."

In her third book, "Go Big or Go Home," acclaimed tattoo artist and reality star Kat Von D delves deep to tell stories from her own life and experiences she's shared with clients. Chock-full of photos of tattoos in various stages of completion and the people who wear them, the book sheds light on the personality, process and profession of one of the tattoo world's brightest stars.

What made this book more challenging to write than your other two?
I've always been an open book — no pun intended. It's just a little bit more profound on an emotional level. I want to be as open and honest as possible, even in all my flaws.

You're known for your portrait work. How did you get into that?
I was doing a lot of them [on TV] and got a reputation for portraits. I love black and gray realism. So I could do a portrait of a paper clip, or a person, and I'd still get excited. It's more about the textures and accuracy.

You're in a boys' club, so what's it like being a female tattoo artist?
I go back and forth on that subject. Although I feel lucky to be a girl because it's fun to be a girl, I get kind of annoyed by these uber-feminists who make gender such a big part of who they are. I don't think gender should define you. I've always wanted my work to speak for itself. month, but that's it.

On tattoos

Von D: Openly devoted to you

"There's all this negative stigma surrounding people with tattoos," says Von D when asked what she loves about the tattoo world and her chosen industry. "But I've always thought it's a form of being openly devoted to something, and that's a very rare and great quality to have. You listen to people's stories during an intimate session, and really get to know somebody. I like the idea of being extra connected to a piece because you know how much it's valued by the client."

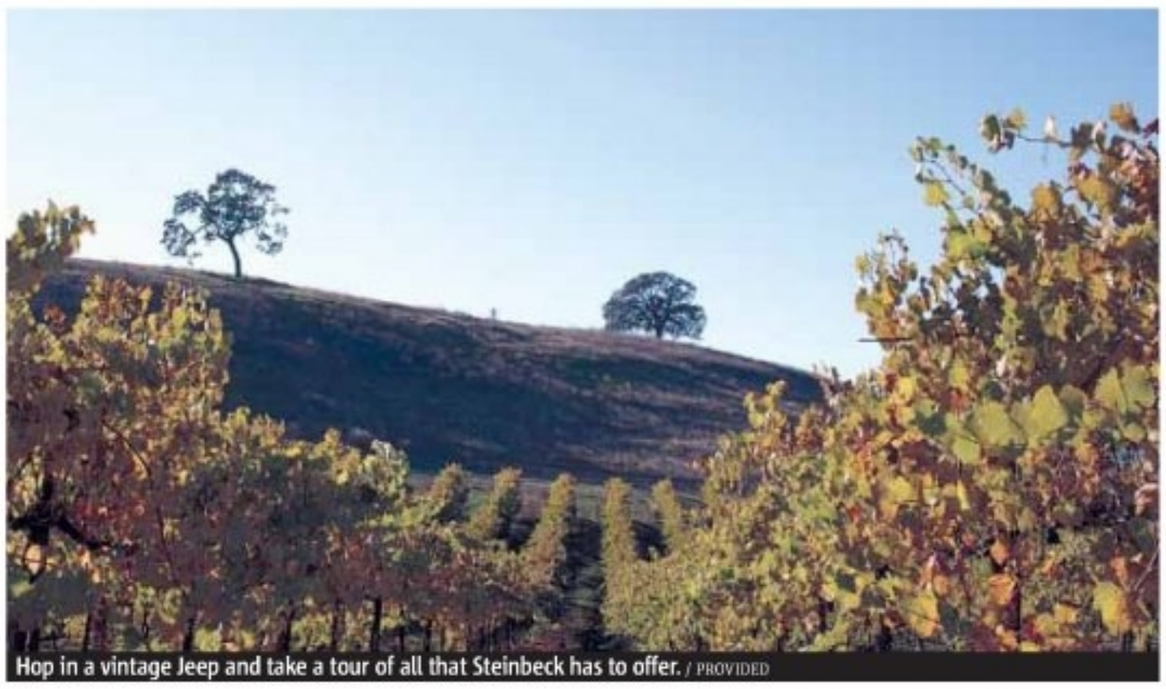
9 Reasons to go to Paso Robles now

Destinations. This part of California's Central Coast has been overshadowed by the state's other wine regions — but not anymore.



Hop in a vintage Jeep and take a tour of all that Steinbeck has to offer. / PROVIDED

The time for Paso has arrived — top wine producers here are turning out some remarkable juice. The range of styles and expressions, across the gamut of varietals, is both unexpected and delicious. Paso does elegant just as well as it does powerful. Oh, and the food ain't so bad either.

The wine

Longtime favorites like Tobin James are as excellent as ever. Tastings are free — they're confident that you'll purchase what you taste. Steinbeck Vineyards and Winery offers a unique take on what the Central Coast is capable of, and if you have a chance to take a trip through the vines in their vintage Jeep, jump at it. Chateau Margene is a testament to the ever-climbing quality of wine from the Central Coast: Their cabernets and bordeaux-style blends are complex and age-worthy. Vina Robles is in the process of constructing an amphitheater that will host some of the region's best acts. Aronhill Vineyards not only produces remarkable cabernet sauvignon and primitivo, but lunch on their terrace overlooking the Templeton Gap is a must. BRIAN FREEDMAN

Dine here

Artisan restaurant is a standout in Paso Robles. Executive chef and owner Chris Kobayashi is creating exciting dishes like wild boar tenderloin with caramelized fennel risotto and a green garlic pistou that tastes exactly like spring. Il Cortile takes inspiration from Italy and makes it perfectly suited to the flavors of the Central Coast. Think lamb ravioli, paired with a local grenache from Austin Hope. And Thomas Hill Organics, the highly lauded wine bar and bistro, offers a menu bursting with whimsy and intelligence. Enjoy it with one of the remarkable beers from Paso's Firestone Walker Brewery.

Toilet training. The new parenting trend is "elimination communication." What is it, and how can you implement it at home?

No diaper? No problem

No diaper required: The EC technique means watching and listening to your baby's cues. / PIXLAND

dorothy.robinson@metro.us

It seems impossible: A baby — many times not much older than newly born — goes to the bathroom directly into the toilet and not a diaper. Devotees of "elimination communication" say that it can happen. Christine Gross-Loh has been preaching this alternative to toilet training for years; her book, "The Diaper Free Baby," has been the instruction manual for EC devotees since it was published in 2007. Here she gives advice on being No. 1 in the "number two" business.

How is EC different from regular toilet training?
The most basic difference is that you start EC earlier, before a child has become so used to eliminating in diapers that potty training is a whole new transition he has to get used to (and may be resistant to). Babies are born with this awareness of elimination, but as they become used to eliminating in a diaper all the time, they lose that awareness — and have to work on becoming aware again when they reach the age of conventional toilet training. EC-ed children are often out of diapers completely at or before the age when most children are just beginning to embark on potty training.

What advice do you have for working parents who live in cities who may want to try EC?
EC can be done during the evening or on weekends. Even if you are at home with your baby full-time, you may not be doing EC full-time. It's easy to have some diaper-free time during the evening, or sit your baby on the potty before and after his bath. Doing EC does not mean you have to ditch diapers completely.

What are some drawbacks to EC? Benefits?
It's hard to do anything when it's not a cultural norm — you may get less support and less information. Information about EC — about typical stages, about the logistics — is really key. Luckily, the information and support is out there as more and more parents do EC. And there are so many great reasons to give it a try: There are communication benefits (you learn to read your baby just as you learn how to figure out when he is hungry or sleepy), environmental and economic benefits (you go through fewer diapers) and health benefits (less diaper rash). Finally, you are not relying on diapers so much that your child becomes reluctant to let go of them, a problem that some parents face when doing conventional toilet training.

Why do you think EC has taken off in recent years?
I think it's because there are so many parents out there who know more about the world around us. They know that in cultures around the world, it's not at all the norm for a baby older than 1 to be in a diaper (if he was ever in a diaper at all). When you know that this isn't a universal thing, it makes you feel more open to understanding why and how this is, and to realizing there are some viable lessons here for us. When I had my first child 13 years ago, I had heard of EC but thought of it as a black-or-white endeavor — you either do it fully or you don't. I simply couldn't imagine how you could make it work in a culture where we have so many homes with carpets! But my experiences showed me that you can do it to any degree that works for you. Even if your baby sits on the potty just once a day, there are benefits.

EC for every parent

Gross-Loh aims to make "The Diaper Free Baby" accessible to all types of parents and she writes for three categories: Full-Time, Part-Time and Occasional EC-ers.

She also includes a support group within the book that includes inspiring testimonials and tips throughout every chapter.

Quoted

"EC-ed children are often out of diapers completely at or before the age when most children are just beginning to embark on potty training."

Use cover to expose the cover-up

Re: 'Graphic cover not needed to make a point' (Metro, May 17-19) I congratulate Metro for showing the exact results of the factories' deep greed. I believe any other way of expression would simply strengthen the corrupt system that's supposed to protect these workers and further the financial gains of the factory owners even while knowing how poorly their factories operate. I believe such exposure creates hope for the rest of the employees. The photos shown by Metro or any other news outlet simply reported the reality of what's happening, to prevent more deaths, especially for the future employees, including children.

There is no need for a preventive format in the paper. I consider it hypocrisy. Children today are aware of constant evils in all societies. The children are connected through the Internet. It should be the parents' responsibility to TALK with their children.

A practice bound for error

Re: 'Too broad a brush: How a minority is getting a voice' (Metro, May 20) This demonstrates the dangers of stereotyping any minority, not just AAPI. Since this group, if you could even call it a group, comes from places ranging from Japan to the much smaller Pacific Islands, any attempt to place them in a grouping, and assign any characteristic to them, is foolish. This also goes for almost every other ethnic or religious group on the planet. The problem with trying to stereotype people based on arbitrarily assigned criteria is that you almost always get it wrong.

FINDING OPPORTUNITY AT THE INTERSECTION OF BUSINESS AND HEALTHCARE

Now more than ever, businesses and healthcare organizations share the challenge of managing rising healthcare costs while maintaining quality delivery of healthcare services. Implementation of the Affordable Care Act has already changed the healthcare community and more provisions are yet to come. For example, with the act's insurance mandate going into effect next year, millions more will have access to healthcare, requiring healthcare organizations to become more innovative in the way they operate and provide patient care. In order to effectively adjust to this challenging and ever-evolving regulatory environment, the business and healthcare fields are intersecting rapidly and out of necessity.

At the same time, professionals are discovering they lack the knowledge in their respective fields to revamp the business of healthcare. Many are turning to continuing education to better position themselves to lead and shape this changing healthcare landscape, and address its challenges. Even with years of medical education, an increasing number of professionals in the healthcare field are seeking advanced management degrees. Individuals employed in business disciplines such as human resources, finance or information systems, see the healthcare field as an opportunity to do well by doing good. By merging business acumen and healthcare industry knowledge, these individuals are preparing themselves for healthcare management careers that can help improve people's lives every day. In light of forthcoming healthcare policies, healthcare managers will also play a vital role in ensuring the quality and efficiency of the care patients receive.

As new healthcare law provisions go into effect, the healthcare management industry is expected to experience exceptional job growth

New England College of Business and Finance (NECB) recently launched its Master of Healthcare Management degree program to address the business of healthcare. The curriculum, which includes courses in risk and regulatory compliance as well as healthcare law and policy, is designed to position young students and already successful professionals alike for career growth and leadership positions by giving them a foundation for advancement in healthcare management. With this master's program, NECB continues to provide its students with the theoretical and practical knowledge they need for high-demand careers. As new healthcare law provisions go into effect, the healthcare management industry is expected to experience exceptional job growth. According to the most recent data collected by the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), there were 303,000 healthcare management jobs in 2010. The number of available jobs is expected to increase 22 percent by 2020, significantly faster than the average growth expected across all careers. Unlike many traditional management programs, graduates of healthcare management programs can find significant opportunities in areas ranging from small rural communities to large metropolitan areas and throughout the world.

Health and business professionals have the chance to be at the forefront of innovation in the healthcare community

While there are significant challenges facing the healthcare industry, there are also many opportunities. MORE WAYS TO EXPLORE – MORE OPPORTUNITIES TO LEARN
Delve into the exciting field of Biomimicry in which scientists are studying the way that nature solves problems, and putting that to use in modern design. Find out how embedding spider web designs into the glass in high rise buildings keeps birds from flying into the panes, or how studying a small beetle in the desert could help solve problems of water supply in areas plagued by drought.

Discover other cultures

The Haitian Creole Language and Culture Summer Institute at the Harbor Campus is a three-week intensive evening program geared toward the acquisition and practice of Haitian Creole. Long popular with those in the allied health professions as well as teachers and school administrators, you'll spend time with native speakers of Creole who lead students of all levels in traditional study as well as learning through in-class performances and song.
You'll have the opportunity for immersion in the Haitian-speaking environment as well as a chance to participate, on a voluntary basis, in fieldwork activities in different Haitian community-based organizations and agencies outside of classroom time.

Dig Deep and Discover the Past
If staying closer to home is what you prefer, you can still have an excellent summer digging for signs of past civilizations in Plymouth Colony, Hassanamesit Woods in Grafton, Mass or on the Eastern Pequot Reservation in North Stonington, Connecticut.

Bruins, Rangers fight power-play struggles

NHL. The B's and Blueshirts haven't had much luck this postseason when the odds are in their favor.

If you enjoy power-play goals, then the Bruins-Rangers Eastern Conference semifinals series is definitely not for you. We are only two games in, with Game 3 tonight in New York (7:30, NBCSN), but the respective power plays both look nearly hopeless: Boston is 1-for-5 vs. New York and 4-for-25 (16 percent) in the postseason while New York is 0-for-8 vs. Boston and 2-for-36 (5.6 percent) in the postseason. Bruins fans probably thought that they had seen the worst man advantage in the NHL all year, but the Rangers take it to a whole other level in terms of power play futility.

Boston has the 11th ranked power play of the 16 teams that were in the 2013 playoffs, the only active team that is below them is New York, which is 15th. In many ways, it's remarkable that these teams have advanced this far. It speaks to their overriding strengths in other areas — namely goaltending, depth and team defense. When you look around at the rest of the league, three of the top five power play units (Penguins, Sharks and Kings) in the playoffs and four of the top six (Senators) are still alive and have all won at least one game in the semifinals. Pittsburgh's is the best one, No. 2, as it has scored 10 times in 37 opportunities (27 percent).

The Bruins have at least shown signs of life with their power play. Defenseman Torey Krug scored a power-play goal to tie it at two in the third period of Game 1 (a game the B's eventually won 3-2 in overtime), and Boston's power play early in overtime didn't result in a goal, but eight shots on goal and constant pressure swung the momentum their way for the rest of the contest

Somehow the Rangers' power play seems to get worse every time they roll it out. They are 0-for-21 on the road and they haven't scored in their last 16 chances overall.

Down 0-2 in the series, the Rangers will have to win four of the next five games (for the second series in a row) to get back to the Eastern Conference Finals (where they lost to the Devils last season). It's hard to see them pulling that off without an exorcism of a horrid power-play unit.

Gronk undergoes successful surgery, skips Vegas event

NFL. The Patriots tight end cleared one health hurdle yesterday with successful surgery on his forearm.

Patriots tight end Rob Gronkowski has turned down a party invitation.

The Pats star was set to go to Las Vegas as part of a promotional tour by private jet-sharing program JumpSeat, but JumpSeat's Twitter feed wrote this past weekend, "Hey Folks… sorry 'bout the disappointment, but the Gronk trip is not happening. He is staying home relaxing."

The tight end reportedly had successful surgery on his injured forearm at Massachusetts General Hospital yesterday. A new plate was installed in the arm, and there is no longer an infection.

Gronkowski is also suffering from "chronic" back pain, according to an NFL.com report, and will be sent to a spine specialist. The report said that Gronkowski could also face additional surgery for his back.

A major reason as to why Gronkowski fell to the Patriots in the second round of the 2010 NFL Draft was because he missed the entire 2009 season at Arizona after undergoing back surgery.

Gronkowski agreed to a six-year, $54 million contract with the Patriots last summer after a 2011 season in which he set NFL records for a tight end with 17 touchdown catches and 1,327 receiving yards.

Gronkowski was on pace for another All-Pro year in 2012 as he had 55 receptions and 11 touchdowns through 11 games but the big tight end was injured blocking on an extra point in the Patriots' 59-24 Week 11 victory over the Colts.

Gronkowski returned in the AFC divisional playoff round against Houston but re-injured his arm. He did not play in the AFC Championship Game loss to Baltimore.
